Customer challenges and requirements

■ ■ OGEC SCSE had a fleet of 15 Konica Minolta MFPs, with no access control or detailed overview of the amount of printed material produced; approximately 3 million pages per year. Two devices were dedicated to the reprographics department for teachers' printing. This service required a full-time person to manage the printing, as well as a shuttle system to deliver them to the various teachers at the five remote sites. The OGEC SCSE wanted to update the equipment to provide a faster service while reducing operating costs. Moreover, OGEC SCSE had just migrated its user directory to Office 365.

The solution

■ ■ Canon France proposed that the client had the same number of MFPs with the addition of on-demand printing for teachers at each site by including adapted finishing modules, such as saddle stitching, and connecting the MFPs to uniFLOW Online. This cloud service allows teachers to submit their work from any self-service PC or tablet, via drag and drop, onto the uniFLOW Online portal or by using the mobile app then authenticating on any MFP to release their print jobs. Their printing is even counted when they print directly from a USB stick connected to an MFP. Controlled budgets have also been put in place to allow higher grade students to print.

Benefits

■ ■ Initial feedback from teachers has been very positive; deployment and learning the new processes was quick and easy. The IT department has been able to offer a new way of printing from any computer without deploying a printer driver, so no time wasted managing multiple printer drivers. Despite teachers' apprehension about new processes, these have been adopted without any problems. Operating costs have been reduced and the final result will be easily measured at the end of the year thanks to the uniFLOW Online integrated dashboards and reports.
